Journey of Otis

In the world of a 2D comic, creatures exist on a 2-dimensional plane. However, with minimal ability of production, the economy was gradually falling apart.

On one gloomy morning, Otis the robot strolls to work at the usual oil factory. To his surprise, upon reaching the front doors, Otis sees two giant pieces of tape criss-crossed, which did now allow him to enter the factory. He soon discovers that he got laid off from his job and leaves the factory aimlessly, wandering around out on the streets.

Eventually, he comes across an oil bar and decided to go inside to drink away his sorrow. After a few drinks, Otis became quite drunk. Due to his actions and nausea, he then gets throw out the door. Otis then figures that he should try to go home because there is nothing else he can do for the day since job depletion has become a major issue in his society. Then, forgetting to look at the light before crossing, Otis gets hit by a car which bumps him out of the 2D world.

With the high force impact, Otis gets thrown into the 3D world and lands on a muddy puddle with his head facing down and lies on the spot unconsciously. Soon after, he wakes up and looks around the 3D environmental space and wonders in confusion. Then he looks down at the puddle and sees himself as a fat robot and goes "no!!!"

Otis then goes around the city trying to figure out where he is and all the features of the new world. He then passes by a shop that was giving out wine tasting samples. Otis tries some and realizes that the drinks are a lot better than oil! Coincidentally, on the corner of his eyes, he caught a sign saying "now hiring".

At last, Otis found himself a new job as a wine connoisseur in the new world.
